

The ARC Bullion Accounts continue to offer members a safe haven.

The ARC Bullion Account GBP has produced 131.10% since its launch and remains the top performing physical gold investment in the world, in terms of absolute return in Sterling. Its sister account valued in USD has also fared well, filing returns of 119.38% since its launch.

I am sure it is reassuring in these trying times that both accounts continue to perform in line with their purpose, namely, to provide members with a degree of wealth preservation. These investments were designed for portfolio protection, and as such offer a less volatile form of investment in physical gold.

Recent statistics simply confirm and underline this fact; the risk reward ratio's produced by both ARC accounts are very telling. The ARC Sterling has produced a ratio of 25/1 and the USD based account has filled 30/1, both investments being assessed over the 24 month period. These statistics are unsurpassed, the ARC has provided those invested with a very palatable return, and most importantly, have minimised any risk taken to do so.

I have traded physical gold for over 22 years. In 1998 I was one of the first in the industry to accurately forecast the arrival of what became the last historic gold bull market, it lasted over a decade. Importantly, my extensive experience in trading gold helped me identify the arrival of the coming gold bear market; as such I recommended that members sell their gold positions at $1,800 an ounce.

RIO closed 70% of all bullion positions held at $1830 on the 12th of Sept 2011, locking in gains. Following that gold fell back, before recovering to $1,791.51 in September 2012, I closed all remaining gold positions netting 630% for those invested.

<https://www.therioclub.com/forbes/Gray-on-Gold-Forbes-Article-July-2014.pdf>

Gold

Gold is by far the most popular investment among precious metals. Investors around the world have bought gold to diversify their portfolios; many buy bullion for wealth preservation during uncertain economic times such as today.

Currently the outlook for bullion remains positive for many reasons; one reason being the fact that the UK's national debt has topped £2 trillion, this means that it has passed 100% of the country's GDP for the first time in over 50 years. Should we consider the bigger picture, factoring in the global debt, the situation is very troubling. I may be among the first to warn that this build-up of debt could easily fuel the next debt crisis. For those in doubt, they may find solace in the fact that I am well renowned for my early warning predictions and over the years many such warnings have been proven accurate.

During 2005 I predicted the arrival of the US mortgage market meltdown, a collapse that subsequently affected millions of people worldwide. In a series of detailed reports, I spelled out that this event would likely bring down the US housing market, which it did.

Members may recall that during early 2007 I correctly forecast an almost incomprehensible investment warning, with the imminent arrival of what become known as the 2008 global financial crisis. My timely warning had protected members from massive losses in the stock market and those who took my advice in selling their stock positions and buying gold banked strong gains.

A more recent example being my prediction on the outcome of the initial Brexit vote in June 2016, calling this outcome correctly afforded me the opportunity to position the ARC bullion account to net gains, I banked 12.1% in one month for those invested. Being on the right side of a major event is usually very profitable.

Looking forward this is ideal time to invest in the ARC, if you haven't already done so.

There are plenty of reasons; if all of the above were not enough then there's the ongoing fiasco between the UK and the EU with the trade negotiations stagnant, a deal is still possible according to Downing Street, but if no deal was confirmed it would fuel gold's rally.

Add to that the nightmare possibility of a second wave of the pandemic which has plagued the world, Covid 19, such a scenario would certainly cause a rally in gold.

There are some who have held off buying, they may feel that gold is currently overpriced, but they would be wrong, it is currently a buy, for all of the above reasons and many more.

Here are a few more to add to the list; the prospect of negative real interest rates, the threat of a cold war with China, possible economic depression. Today, the factors that traditionally drive investors to seek safety in gold are amplified and as such it will remain in rally mode.

I remain bullish on gold and silver; this is exactly why members looking for a safe-haven should invest in the ARC or the Silver Lining.

William Gray
The RIO Club